But receiving the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom led by Mr. Leonard Leo in his office in Abuja, Aondoakaa said investigation to uncover the underlying motive behind the Boko Haram crisis, was still ongoing adding that "such crisis does not have the support of government as might be perceived."

He also absolved the federal government of any complicity in such violent religious crisis saying it "is plain criminality by some people who manipulate gullible people, using religious sentiments to create unnecessary problems".

He however solicited the support of the commissioner in the area of investigation, to separate genuine religious fundamentalists fomenting conflict, from criminals or anti-establishment elements, as the perpetrators of the Boko Haram crisis who committed arson against police station as well as killing police officers.
